Early Childhood is a critical time for intervention

Research suggests children who receive early intervention demonstrate increased levels of improvement in areas of personal, social, and academic functioning.

Our developmental experts will work with your family to accurately identify the strengths and growth areas for your family and child. Following accurate identification, our clinical team will provide research-supported treatment to best meet your needs.

Comprehensive Family Support

Step 1: Call 262-786-9184 to speak with a professional and to schedule an assessment or therapy appointment.

Step 2: Developmental Assessment

The assessment program uses a strength-based approach to assess the child and the family when there is concern about emerging emotional, behavioral or developmental challenges. The assessment takes into account many aspects of the child's development and the family's life including: behavior, emotions, relationships, health, intelligence, family, learning style, family values, beliefs and traditions.

Step 3: After the assessment is complete the team of clinicians, parents, etc. meets to develop a plan that maximizes the family's strengths and addresses identified needs.

Step 4: Birth to Five Therapeutic Services

The family's therapist will typically work with the primary caregiver, the child, and other invested parties to support the child and family in their journey toward improved functioning. This may include play therapy, parent skills training, school/daycare consultation, parent-child interaction training, and the use of developmentally appropriate rewards and consequences to improve behavior.

Q&A

How do I know if I need a developmental assessment?

Families pursue developmental evaluations for many different reasons. If you or a professional working with your family have raised questions about whether your child is functioning at developmentally appropriate levels in any domain, it may benefit you to have your child evaluated.

What types of therapy are offered for young children?

We provide empirically validated treatments, which typically include behavioral methods and parent training. Parents may desire therapeutic support due to concerns regarding their child's social, emotional, or cognitive development. In addition, parents concerned about their child's attachment and the parent-child relationship often find therapy beneficial. It is also common for parents to pursue therapy to address behavioral challenges, Autism, Pervasive Developmental Disorders, and Attention Deficit Disorder.
